wherein said vector of data characterizing said environment of said current pixel in the digital image is based upon the gray level of the current pixel in the digital image, average gray levels around the current pixel for different neighborhoods thereof in the digital image, the maximum deviation of the gray levels of the pixels in different neighborhoods of the current pixel in the digital image, the standard deviation of the gray levels of the pixels in different neighborhoods of the current pixel in the digital image, the local contrast level in a neighborhood of the current pixel in the digital image, and the gradient over four directions in a neighborhood of the current pixel in the digital image. This patentable distinction is included in independent claim 6.
